

Daemons and The Trialectical Demiurges

2026-8

This text is an intellectual exercise which lies between fantasy and analytical digression about spiritual phenomena affecting this world. Although aiming to be an actual theory, it cannot be truly analytical, because of the nature of metaphysics and the inevitable necessity for priori assumptions about the unknown, so it should be treated as something between fantasy and reality to any reader.

Contents

1	The Concept of Demiurge	1
2	The Trialetics	2
3	Nature of Spirit and Spiritual Force	2
4	Daemons - Good and Evil	5
5	The Intellect	6
6	Chaos, Order and Equilibrium	7
7	God's Existence	9
8	Sleeping God and God's Dream	12
9	Trialectical Demiurges	13
10	Conclusion	16

1 The Concept of Demiurge

The concept of Demiurge varies according to different authors. From the platonic perspective, the Demiurge is a benevolent creator, which creates things in this world based on principles and laws, not being evil, but not been omnipotent, so the creation isn't perfect by his limitation to create this world from certain rules and laws.

That view of platonic demiurge is close to a concept of christian's God, except the attribute of omnipotency, yet this benevolent entity isn't the concept of Demiurge which is been proposed on this text. The view of this text is closer to gnostic Demiurge, which is an evil entity, that creates the world to inprison the God's sparkles (human souls), with lies and deception the demiurge creates a world to keep humans in ignorance of his true nature.

This second concept, the gnostic Demiurge, shares attributes with the trialectical demiurges, but the approach to define the nature of Demiurge comes from the concept of trialectics, and has less of the deity characterists. Instead of creating fantasies about the form and nature of those deities (which are three or at least, three aspects), all fantasies of form and nature should be treated as archetypes, symbolical projections of their intagible nature.

But this don't means that those entities are good or evil, in trialectical school they are considered evil and at sametime inevitable or predictable, by the way the universe operates. So it's not an insurgent evil, like the gnostic school states, rather it's part of a natural process of evolution of universe through the evolution of conscience of their creatures.

It's not insurgent, it's not a revolt against the true creator, it's more like a challenge for the creatures which reached a certain level of conscience to evolve and allow the evolution and the emergence of higher consciences on physical world. The conscience is the key concept of trialec-tical Demiurges.

Nevertheless, on the microscopic perspective of the relation between the entities of the world, they are evil and so the entities who incarnates them. The challenge should be surpassed and not be ignored, at cost of suffering and eventually self-destruction of the beings at test.

2 The Trialetics

What is trialectics? The idea of trialectics comes from dialectics, but dialectics itself is a term that was developed from different authors towards different meanings. In this text the dialectics has two meanings, one is the reflexive action of thinking through dialogues, the socratic dialectics, this action is just generalized to become a general approach to solve problems. The second meaning is the dialectical projections, which essentially is a modelling tool to understand concepts. The trialectics is a kind of dialectical projection which uses a conceptual structure related to the conscience.

The conscience trialectics is the emotion, intellect and will. Those three are projections of the conscience through a more fundamental trialectics (Perception,Processing,Response), and this later trialectics is a derived dialectics from the topological dialectics (External Form,Internal Content).

There are many, possibly infinite possibilities of dialectical basis, and that concept of basis comes from the linear álgebra in mathematics, so the concept of projection. The trialectics is important, because it's model the conscience itself, the emotion is the conscience of perception, a projection of conscience towards the dimension of emotion, the intellect is the conscience of understanding, the projection of conscience toward the intellect, and the will is the conscience of choice and action, which is the projection of conscience towards the will dimension.

It's possible to conscience have more than three dimensions? We assume that is unlikely the case, is the same problem of finding a fourth dimension for the three-dimensional space, sounds unnatural, sounds strange, seems that there is no other dimension that fits.

The Demiurge is assumed to be a challenge for the conscience's development. So one can assume that it could have, or could be decomposed in trialectics. In this text, the Demiurge, or each one of three Demiurges, tries to halt one's conscience evolution, and the way it perform it is through attraction towards one or two directions. The main objective of Demiurge is flattening the three-dimensional nature of conscience, transforming in a defective, or degenerate conscience with only one or two dimensions.

3 Nature of Spirit and Spiritual Force

What is a spirit? What is the relation of spirit and mind? What is the spiritual nature of human mind? The spirit, the conscience and the concept of life in this text are assumed to be all emergent phenomenons, they emerge from the dynamical relation between other entities, and with them, emergent new properties.

Chaos and order, randomness and determinism, existences which displays a stable relationship between the chaotic component and deterministic component encapsulated by a topological being (External Form, Internal Content) are the essence of the life and so the spirit and conscience.

What is the nature of a spiritual being? The physical phenomena transforms energy from an ordered state to a chaotic state, that transformation liberates energy and increases the entropy of universe, the spiritual phenomena does the opposite, it transforms chaos in order, at expense of energy. Is the nature of spirit to increase order, and we as spiritual beings, for every action, we transform the multiplicity of possible actions in choices and we externalize it to create things, that's only possible because of the chaotic nature of our mind.

The spiritual force is the ability to transform chaos in order, and the spiritual force don't violate any law of nature, because laws are essentially deterministic properties, which the spirit can't transform. The act of the spirit only works on chaos, not on fixed, static or determinism components. The chaos should be considered the gate, the access point, from spiritual world to physical world. But chaos generating order, could or not be derived from spiritual source.

What is being stated in this digression is that chaos is necessary for the spiritual phenomena.

```
? Chaos is necessary for conscience
:: Suppose not // absurd hypothesis
:: So could exist a conscience without chaotic component
:: ? Can a conscience exercise choice without chaotic component
:: :: If there is no chaos, then every thing is deterministic
:: :: Every action being deterministic means that there is no choice
:: ..
:: With no actual choice, so every action is an illusion of choice
:: So humans don't act, only observe from a privileged perspective
..
```

Remember, there is no formal demonstration on general philosophy, so even if it resembles a formal demonstration from theorem, it's not formal, because there is operators, functions, and variables being used. The formal logic operates as a projection of the reasoning as a mechanical process, but the informal reasoning don't operates mechanically, it operates inside our mind. That difference is crucial to avoid misunderstandings. The logical reasoning used in this text should be assumed to be similar to the mathematics used on physics, it keeps the mind on an objective ground, but don't have the same value.

Actually, that reasoning only exchange the problem to another. Humans act or the action and choice is just an illusion? From one consciousness perspective, we have only the sensation (emotional component) granted, we feel things, is the only certainty about conscience, we don't know for sure if we are exercising choice (will component), and our mind can't be sure of things, we understand as a feeling (intellectual projection to emotional component), but our mind is limited and we often fail to understand correctly things, all the knowledge acquired could be illusory, could even been changing every time we wake up and we don't feel it because our mind changes at same pace.

We assume from here, that action and choice are not an illusion, but an actual emergent phenomenons which is directly derived from the relation between chaos and determinism.

```
? Stability is necessary for existence
:: Suppose not // Absurd hypothesis
:: So could exists something absolutely unstable
:: ? Can something absolutely unstable be recognized as an existence
:: :: to be recognized is necessary stable properties
:: :: if the only stable property is the absolute instability
:: :: then the recognition is the same for chaos itself
:: :: chaos exists but not as existence
:: ..
:: an existence absolutely unstable cannot be diffentiated from chaos itself
:: as it dont have any other stable property other than absolute unstability
..
```

For existences of any kind, is reasonable that it should preserve some stable property, and so the conscience, as an existence itself, should have stable properties, information, which embodies the concept of determinism. Memory is necessary for conscience, without memories of any kind, the mind will be in a vegetable state. What is memory? Is the information preserved on our mind.

Chaos as an existence, it exists in a special class, like zero being a number that represents nothing, or an empty set being a set with no elements, the chaos is an existence which represents no existence other than itself, or no proper existence.

Is the chaos sufficient for the spiritual phenomena? Is the information necessary for the spiritual phenomena? Information and the retention and transformation of information are not only important for conscience, but for life, as the life needs to preserve their information to reproduce copies of itself in DNA. To spiritual phenomena exists in physical world, it needs stable properties, exogenous spirits don't have physical bodies, so the determinism cannot be in physiology.

There is two assumptions that could be used to assert about the deterministic component of spirits, an so their existence on physical world, it could be possible that they have spiritual bodies, with proper physiology, or the information itself, preserved on our subconscience, be their body and the source of determinism.

In this text, we assume the second one, not denying the possibility to exist a spiritual body, but in order to effectively exists on physical world, the actual information preserved on our minds (subconscience) seems of special importance.

So that gives the picture of trialetical phenomena involving the spirit, life and conscience. We have a topological existence, able to retain information, transform or even reproduce that information, and those dynamical transformations being mixed in nature between chaotic and deterministic processes.

Now we will link some concepts from spiritualistic religions (spiritism and budhism) to state that the spirit connects by the similarity of information, and that connection means, control and spiritual force towards a topological being. So reincarnation is just a process of connection from spirits with similar information to others. The spiritual paranormal phenomena is only possible because those spirits have similar information towards physical minds of living beings. Information creates the link and the chaos creates the liberty to act for spirits, and that includes the own spirit, and possibly exogenous spirits.

4 Daemons - Good and Evil

Spiritual world as we can say from physical perspective is a network of links between spirits, with access points being consciences on physical world, and is unavoidable that exogenous spirits co-habit the mind of physical entities. Some of exogenous spirits which reincarnates, and that means that it fuses without much conflict with the main conscience becomes the subconsciousness of our mind, and those spirits which stays conflicting with our mind, becomes the evil part of subconsciousness. That evil part is not evil in the sense of being unnatural, intrusive thoughts, thoughts that contest and disagree with our main conscience, thoughts that halts and prevent actions, even actions truly desired from the main conscience are part of the conscience.

When those spiritual parasites become too strong, then we could develop mental disorders, and this is important, physical mental disorder could or not be of spiritual nature, but the source of a mental disorder is fundamentally from the chaos, and that chaos if could be treated properly by medicine, should be treated physically and not being treated by mysticism.

Daemons are those spirits, which stays close and creates this spiritual network on physical world. Could be good or could be evil, and not necessary those intrusive conflicting thoughts being evil, as well those spirits that reincarnates with strong similarity not being necessarily good. It's a complex ecosystem of spiritual beings, but there is three strong spiritual beings which are the main reason for this text.

In the same fashion that conscience emerges from a collection of subconsciousnesses, spiritual beings been consciences itself can lead to the emergence of a higher conscience, the three Demiurges arises from those collections of consciences, they arise from the spiritual conflict between degenerated spirits (one or two dimensional consciences), so conflicting emotional spirits creates the emotional Demiurge, conflicting intellectual spirits creates the intellectual Demiurge and those conflicting from will, creates the Demiurge of will. That's is an hypothesis, because, it could be that those Demiurges didn't arise, but were priori existences. We could say, God could be the emergence of an entity from the harmony of all three directions of conscience, the Demiurge is the separation and emergence of three kinds, conflicting between each other.

Seems to be clear that, being priori or not, is not relevant for the actual challenge, the direction for the evolution of higher conscience beings is the incarnation of God on physical world, and if we fail, the Demiurges will incarnate on physical world instead, each one conflicting with each other. That incarnation not means a physical incarnation (like an anti-christ or Jesus), could be, but we are not committing to this assumption.

What separates Daemons from good and evil is what they do to physical minds, how they shape the conscience of a physical mind as a three-dimensional entity. Daemons from God, tries to bring that emergent existence on a physical mind, creating an harmonious three-dimensional conscience. Daemons from Demiurges, halts that process, by sabotage, by deception, by temptation, or any means to prevent that three-dimensional state. Evil Daemons are Demons, from christian perspective, and good Daemons are the Angels, but this text don't assume that those spirits are in fact Angels and Demons from the christianity, we are not even certain that those spirits are priori existences. So those names should be considered archtypes, placeholders for those ideas of emergent entities and not actual entities.

The spiritual phenomena can be somehow tested, not as a scientific experiment, but one could experience things that don't have a reasonable physical explanation. There are religions that can help with, like spiritism and budhism, but in this text we assume that Daemons could be any spiritual entity, including those that are already existing in our subconcience. So if you communicate with someone, thinking that this entity is a deceased relative, that could be absolutely wrong, because you could be communicating with those parasites, which has the same access to the memories of the deceased relative. Worse than that, we can be communicating with actual Demons, which co-habits the mind of humans. I don't recommend to engage on those experiences, as it can be deceptive and extremely dangerous.

Why we cannot have scientific spiritual experiments? One reason is how the spiritual phenomena acts on physical world, they act through chaos, and chaos by definition, could be or not a coincidence. An one could argue, we could use statistics, to calculate that coincidence chance, but we are facing the challenge of the Demiurges, and the religion and science are on dispute, the conflict between science and religion is the externalization of this conflict. Is not an easy task, is the challenge imposed to human beings. And this text tries to create a middle point, an interface which could allow the communication between science and religion.

5 The Intellect

The intellect and the intellectual direction of conscience is special, because is the reason why humans become the hegemonic species on this world. Animals have a degree of conscience on all three directions, but not have the ability to understand abstractions as deep and effective than humans, the intellect becomes the direction expanded by humans, but is the reason and logic sufficient or some assumptions are preventing the development of higher consciences.

Skepticism and so atheism is an externalization of one of the Demiurges, is the Demiurge of intellect, which is actively preventing the evolution of conscience by deception of truth about the spiritual world. Is not that being skeptical is not important to investigate the truth, but strong assumptions about metaphysical entities are not reasonable, as if one can't test about a proposition, don't means that this proposition is false.

For example, as we stated that the chaotic component could or not be an entry point for spiritual force, so there is no conflict between natural selection and criacionism, as the natural selection assumes the chaotic phenomena intrinsically, it could or not be affected by a spiritual will. The only reasonable debate arises on strong assumptions, not on possibilities, it could be possible that some sort of creator exists, but that creator to be the Christian God, maybe not.

The dialetical projections was tainted by the marxism, which I could say, prevented his proper role on analytical thinking. The dialetical modelling is a modelling tool, an model is just a map, which helps one to navigate through concepts easily, it improves the conscience in the same fashion as an analogy, but instead of a concrete structure, it works with abstract structures. A model don't answers or state things, it just help the mind to organize related ideas that was already there. To prove things, one should use formal logic or science, not crude dialectical projections.

The intellect can be projected again on trialectics, we have intuition, a more sensitive intellect, close to perception, we have knowledge, a more practical intellect, close to the reality, and we have the wisdom, the intellect of intellect, which works on abstractions, on perception of the essence of things.

If it can be decomposed on trialectics, so it can be affected by trialectical Demiurges, each one trying to flatten the intellect to one or two dimensional states. You cannot rely too much on intuition, denying reason and evidences, if you do so, then you are affected by the Emotional Demiurge. You cannot be too much attached to abstractions and abstract ideas, theories, at the expense of reality, if you do so, then you are affected by the Intellect Demiurge. You cannot be too attached to knowledge, to academical sources, to well established methods, at expense of logical reasoning and intuition, if you do so, then you are affected by the Demiurge of Will, which will trap you into reality, preventing spiritual evolution and more powerfull theories to arise.

It's clear, but easy said than done. Once affected by one of Demiurges, a person would act as one of Demiurge toward others. That's could be even worse than Demoniac possession, not by intensity, but by deception about truth, by creation of ideological movements that embodies one of Demiurges and could eventually creates a perpetual prison for the conscience.

6 Chaos, Order and Equilibrium

Chaos, Order and Equilibrium are considered primal trialectical forces. They are not good or evil, they are neutral, they are part of how the universe operates. The good and evil forces arises once we look through the perspective of the evolution of universe, specifically the evolution of conscience, the evil tries to halt the emergence of higher conscience. But evil can be generalized to the concept of evolution.

Looking at the evolution of living beings, we see that the chaotic component is extremely weak, we could say that the life is extremely conservative, and the forms of life that don't have that conservative nature, don't display much complexity. Chaos cannot be too strong, but cannot be absent. If absent there is no evolution, because there will be no change, if too strong, it will fail to evolve in complexity.

The natural order is the order between those two primal forces, the order is the main force, it preserves the stability, keeping those existences, and preventing them from vanishing, and the chaos, is supportive to evolution, giving the ability to change. If we have an inversion of this relation, if the chaos takes the main role, or a takes a role that isn't supportive, the existence becomes unstable and eventually vanishes from existence. The natural order is simbollically represented as (Order % Chaos).

On trialectical perspective, we assert that chaos is associated to emotion, and order is associated to will, because the order is close to the existences and reality. The third component is the equilibrium, which only arises between a stable ordered relation between those two primal forces.

The intellect is asserted to be associated with equilibrium, so it's consistent that both emerges from those two primal forces. Intellect can be considered an emergence between the relation between emotion and will, becoming eventually something else, a new primal force.

The conscience is the equilibrium of three directions, and we say that it's close to equilibrium, as it is close to the intellect. But the conscience is the equilibrium between those three forces, if the equilibrium becomes absolute, then it becomes indistinguishable between order itself, and that's the loophole, equilibrium cannot be absolute, which means that the natural order cannot be static. Absolute equilibrium will halt the evolution if the chaos component becomes too weak.

So it could be designed to fluctuate with periods of more instability, when the chaos becomes strong enough to free the evolution from a deterministic path. The problem of three bodies in physics and dynamical systems, states that three bodies displays an unpredictable behaviour, and maybe this is the essence of universe, the trialectical behaviour maybe the source of true evolution.

But if the chaos becomes too strong, it could lead only to destruction. Good and evil are defined in this way, good is the natural order ($\text{Order} \% \text{Chaos}$) as order being the main force and chaos supportive, leading to the emergence of equilibrium, only changing enough to keep the evolution towards gain of complexity, and evil is the inversion ($\text{Chaos} \times \text{Order}$), chaos trying to be the main role, but logically being impossible, so the order being unable to prevent destruction and equilibrium failing to exist.

But why we cannot have ($\text{Chaos} \% \text{Order}$), in other why the order cannot cooperate to destruction of things which are preventing the evolution of physical world? When we say ($\text{Chaos} \% \text{Order}$), we are saying that chaos is stronger than order, and often is not necessary or even dangerous to physical world to be too unstable. The symmetry comes from duality of physical and spiritual world. Is the spiritual world that have the chaos as the main role and the order as supportive, spiritual world is the right place for spirits to act, is more closer to chaos and the reality is closer to order.

The inversion of natural order is the attempt to put the order which is natural to spiritual world ($\text{Chaos} \% \text{Order}$) to the physical world. In same fashion as hegelian dialectics being proper to mind and debate of ideas, and the materialistic dialectics not being reasonable, as the conflict outside the mind could lead to violence, which is clearly a regression of conscience (barbarism).

That's why spiritual experiences not being safe and natural on physical world. Physical world is not the proper place for spiritual phenomena, the mind could be an interface, but even the mind can be harmed by excessive chaos. The dream is the safest and maybe the only proper place to experience the spiritual phenomena and is the only recommend by this text. Other experiences are possible and could be more interesting or more sound, but can you trust on spiritual entities which relies on unsafe experiences? Can you distinguish between daemons and your relatives?

The emergence of the intellect seems to be enough chaos and spiritual force to drive changes on physical world, as the intellectual beings able to understand and to change their behaviour way more fast and effective than the biological evolution. So is the intellect the interface for those two natural orders, the spiritual natural order and the physical natural order.

The reader could see that any misunderstanding could lead to the affirmation of revolution as part of nature, because the symmetry is inductive, so the ($\text{Chaos} \% \text{Order}$) could easily be stated as valid pair on physical world if you ignore the existence of spiritual world. And that's the core of the induction of materialism.

We assume in this text that the spiritual phenomena exists, and so the induction was already tainted by this view. But we are not committing to any religion or even the assumption of the existence of God. Actually, we assume that even on death, the question about God will not be properly answered. Worse than that, the Demiurges would try to deceive spirits to believe on false statements, which is the main topic of this text. The Demiurge, each one of them, will try to seduce to ideas that are truth on some perspective, but not truth as a whole.

Proposed Symmetry:

Reality < (Physical World) % (Spiritual World)

((Order % Chaos)) % ((Chaos % Order))

Physical World < Order % Chaos

Spiritual World < Chaos % Order

1. Order of physical world preserve their existences.
2. Chaos of physical world support stable evolution.
3. Chaos of spiritual world grants free will.
4. Order of spiritual world preserve information necessary for conscience.

(Physical World) % (Spiritual World) > Equilibrium

Equilibrium ~ Intellect ~ Mind

(Physical World) % (Spiritual World) > Mind

1. The mind emerges as something derived from harmonious relation from physical and spiritual world.
2. The mind comes from the third primal force, the equilibrium.

7 God's Existence

The God's existence are not an easy topic, one of the reasons are that could be many possibilities of definition of God. We should start by an generic concept of architect, a being or a collection of beings, able to desire, to plan and perform interference (or action) on physical world. The reader should notice that Christian God, Deistic God, Gnostic Demiurges or Platonic Demiurges, many of possibilities of higher intellects exogenous to physical world could fit on the definition of universe architect.

Worse than that, spiritual world composed by spirits from deceased human-like conscience, could fit as architects of universe, just imagine of the possibility that our civilization are not the first one, and older forms of intellect, destroyed or co-existing in other planets could form this complex spiritual force that drives the changes of the universe. They could act as spiritual force on chaos and drive transformations according to their will.

? An architect(s) of universe necessarily exists

:: Suppose not // Absurd Hypothesis

:: there is a possibility that existences emerges from natural laws only.

:: and the chaos not being tempered by spiritual forces, but by coincidence only.

:: [So how complex biological engines exists if not by an higher intellect?]

```
:: [ So how the world, nature and humans, in their complex relationship feels as purpose of human beings and universe itself? ]
..
```

So now, we should emphasize the fragility of pseudo-formal logic demonstration on general philosophy, the reasoning above was used as valid argument to existence of God, we know that the definition of architect is not the definition of God (Deism, Demiurges, Spiritual World), so there is a large space for definition fallacies, but that isn't the point of failure in the argument.

That argument of complexity seems sound enough for religion, but ignores the fact that life are extremely good to preserve good properties by being extremely conservative for changes. Which means every good properties, no matter how long it takes, tends to be preserved, and the spiritual interference is extremely weak, because the chaos are weak. Moreover, that complex biological engines are not perfect, genetical disorders exists. The slow pace of evolutionary changes, the imperfection and weak entry points to spiritual interference could argue against the soundness of complexity as necessarily derived from intellect. Because intellect is fast, intellect could predict against failiures and intellect could only creates if it could effectively act.

But the complexity and harmonious relations between their components, if by an intellect, should be way more higher intellect than humans, and the rarity of defects could not be enough to deny an higher intellect. And the interference been weak, is not absent, and as we stated before, spiritual force acts on chaos, in the same fashion as our mind acts on chaos of our mind to generate ideas, desires, thoughts. The universe could be designed for weak spiritual interference.

Biological science justify their view with these arguments, the conservative nature of evolution, slow pace (billions of years of evolution), imperfections, and the chaos be only chaos, as a pure absense of a cause, and it's sound enough for science development. Yet, in this text we don't deny the possibility of interference, because we interpret the chaos as not being merely the absense of cause, but the possibility of an exogenous cause, nevertheless, we agree that this interference is so weak that if by design, it must be for humans to not relies only on supernatural causes, but to improve our conscience with knowledge of the reality. Furthermore, if by design, it could be to make humans not trust on any source of exogenous spiritual entities, like Demiurges.

So the first absurdity conclusion seems to be not conclusive at all. How about the second argument? The second argument is subjective by nature, we feel that the world is designed to humans, but that could be an artifact from our instincts. It's not sound for logical reasoning to assume a feeling as an argument. There are many religions, each one with strong faith on their own. How they could all be right with contradictory statements based on feeling (faith, intuition)?

```
? (possible) complexity of living beings was not designed from a higher intellect
:: (necessary) complexity of living beings was designed from a higher intellect // Absurd Hypothesis
:: ? (possible) evolution be driven by selection
:: :: breeding is a kind of selection performed by humans.
:: :: bacterial resistance against antibiotics are result of selection.
:: :: so transformation towards a property that enhance the chance of survival can be seen on human scope.
:: ..
```

```

:: [ ? (possible) evolution by selection through enough time generates higher complexity ]
:: ..
:: if the evolution by selection through enough time could generates higher complexity then
:: (possible) complexity of living beings arises naturally by natural selection
:: 0
..

```

Here we are using semi-formal notation for the modes of (necessary) and (possible) which is often used on informal logic for deterministic questions. Zero 0 is a notation for reaching a contradiction, necessary for the demonstration through absurd.

The problem on the atheistic view, is that they exchange the mode of possible with the mode of necessity, so the statement, even if not effectively demonstrated, because it relies on our quantitative intuition of transformations which takes timespans larger than our own lives, if stated as (necessary) complexity of living beings was not designed from a higher intellect that affirmation becomes too strong, and obviously different.

The possibility of intellectual design is already there, as we assumed that the nature of spiritual force transforms chaos in order, it could act on natural selection, and on ecological relationships. The necessity of an architect contradict the nature of spiritual force stated on former sections, which acts on chaos, and chaos itself being just a gate, not a cause, so it could or not be from spiritual interference.

So everything points toward an intellectual neutrality, which is very important in the context of Demiurges. Assuming a side of a statement with metaphysical nature (unknown nature, not directly accessible by physical experiences), are not only unwise, but could be a resulting influence of the Demiurges, to perpetuate ignorance.

Everything should have a cause? If everything should have a cause, then the cause, as part of everything should have cause too, and that's creates a infinite recursion of causes. That's the fragility of informal statement, the question should be stated as: Everything should have priori cause? Now, a priori cause is a cause that just exists, the meaning of priori is to not being derived. So the questions is affirmed on the definition of what is priori and what is derived. The question should be stated as: Everything that's not priori, should have a priori cause.

Why this is important on our digression? The argument of priori cause was used before to state about the necessity of ultimate priori cause, asserting as God himself. But an intellect and consciousness are an emergent phenomena (at least on physical world). By definition of emergent phenomena, they are not priori, but derived from stable relation between other entities. It could not be a reasonable argument to support the existence of God. If God exists, that higher intellect, are governed by laws which God himself depends on, and these laws are the true ultimate priori causes, not God himself.

The gnostic demiurge hypothesis, the hypothesis of an arrogant being, usurping the position of God as an ultimate creator, should alert and prevent us from dangerous rethorics about ultimate, omnipotent, omniscient being which we should devote our lives and obey blindly. This behaviour, often seen on religious thinkers, flatten our conscience on intellectual direction, by deception about the truth. This is a behaviour from our thesis about Trialectical Demiurges, the ultimate purpose of the Trialectical Demiurge is to halt the evolution of conscience, and the false knowledge combined with enforced absolute obedience could lead to an insuperable system.

8 Sleeping God and God's Dream

This section is more close to fantasy than reality, it's a thesis about what God really is. Nevertheless, even if not true, it points out about a possible direction to be followed by humans to surpass the challenge imposed by the Trialectical Demiurges.

We stated before about priori laws, which even God could possibly be bounded. Chaos, Order and Equilibrium, those fundamental forces could fit as priori laws, they could create life, consciousness, spirits and even God himself could be emerged from these laws.

The strength of a spiritual being could be measured by the ability to transform chaos in order, so God if the creator of universe, could have ability to shape the unordered state of chaos to form order (existences with stable properties) as he wishes. But we don't see this supernatural force acting anywhere, actually, what we see in fact, is an extreme ordered state of universe, so strong that we can't assert for sure that spiritual beings exist if we not submit our mind (or the mind of another human) by some sort of chaotic state.

The sleeping God thesis uses that argument of the reality being generated by a strong spiritual entity, which are responsible for the existences of universe to be stable enough to not be tempered directly by spiritual beings, and the big-bang theory, to state that God creates the universe, infusing all his spiritual forces towards a single point and simply vanished.

Well, we are stating that he's dead? Not exactly, what is exactly being dead? There are religions that believe in reincarnation, so if death is not final for humans, not final for animals, why it should be final for other entities, including God?

Adding more content to our fantasy, we state, death is just a sleeping state of spirit, which takes a longer time, so when we die, it's similar to be sleeping, only taking a longer period of time to awake again. The God's time to awake again, or to exist again, or to reincarnate, could take the time of the universe itself. Maybe is that the true cycle of reality, God existing in the beginning, God existing somehow in the end, and recreating again the universe to keep the cycle.

So God is actually sleeping, could God be on conscious state before the true end of universe? The analogy links to the concept of Dream, God's Dream is the short conscious state of God in his own universe created. In same fashion as some people can have a partial state of control and consciousness during a dream, God can on his own dream, become consciousness, as limited as we are in our own dream.

That's the emergence of higher consciousness beings on his universe, humans, and possibly humans more enlightened as Jesus Christ, or saints, or even higher beings in the future. The emergence of higher beings are actually God being partially in conscious state again before the true end in his own dream (the universe).

The Demiurges tries to halt and could possibly act to harm those higher beings, transforming what should be a dream in a nightmare for God. In same way that we experience nightmares and entities begins to attack us once we become self-aware, that process could be happening in the reality. The mind are composed of subconsciences, the analogy fits, with subconsciences as other humans and our conscience being God on our own body. The spiritual principles makes our conscience as a miniature of universe on our mind. So dreaming, awakening, death, reincarnation, all sharing those same spiritual principles but with different intensities, different timescales and different containers of information.

Being a higher being not means that it is closer to God, Demiurges are higher beings, bad humans are higher beings, maybe the true God only will awake on true end. What this fantasy tries to affirm is that higher beings halting the development of higher consciences to emerge is the same as preventing God to possibly aware in his own creation, a higher being acting like that is essentially a Demiurge.

Is this good or evil? Higher consciences once emerged could state that they are the only final possible higher consciences to emerge, they could create theories that perpetuate false statements, preventing the knowledge about spiritual things, as humans does. Preventing the emergence of new forms of conscience seems to be fair enough to state as being evil, even if God don't exists, but the presence of corrupted higher spiritual beings, which arrogates the position of God, makes this truth a true challenge.

9 Trialectical Demiurges

The main cause of problems on physical world is due to the inversion of natural order. As we seen before, there is a natural order between the primal forces of Chaos and Order for stable natural evolution. The natural order is the Order being the main role and Chaos be in supportive role (Order % Chaos), that's order is the natural order of physical world, in spiritual world the Chaos are stronger, so we say that the natural order on spiritual world is (Chaos % Order). Between those two worlds there is another order which was followed before the emergence of humans. The Physical % Spiritual order, which essentially is the embodiment of the natural physical order Order % Chaos because, Physical is associated to Order and Spiritual with Chaos.

The inversion points can occurs on Physical % Spiritual relation or in (Order % Chaos){Physical}, the first is the direct interference of spiritual world on physical world and the second is physical instability which could or not be from spiritual world.

Those spiritualistic religions with invasive rituals increase the interference of the spiritual on physical world, that kind of interference are not supported by this text for two reasons, first the proper spiritual communication is through the dreaming state, the second is that those interference could be mainly from daemons, which are not necessarily human spirits.

The physical instability could or not be from spiritual world, but as we've said before, persons affected by Demiurge views, would always tries to create division and confusion, when the intellectual, emotional and volitional ideological views begin to fight between each other, that's the main thesis of trialectical Demiurges.

How the Demiurges corrupt the mind of the humans?

Reason(Reality % Mind) % Emotion

That's the natural order of a rational person, with emotion as supportive role for reason through intuition, with the reason itself ordered by Reality as the main source of truth through evidences and Mind with supportive role through logic. There could be four points of inversion on this relation.

1. Emotion $\times$ Reason : when the emotion takes or tries to take the main role.
2. Mind $\times$ Reality : when abstractions and theories tries to take the main role over evidences.
3. Reality % - : when the reality through empirism denies the logical reasoning.
4. Reason % - : when the reason denies the spirituality of human beings.

Utopic Religions, Fundamentalistic Religions, Empirism, Utopic Ideologies, Emotional Ideologies, Scientificism, and Atheism. All those are examples which fit on one of those four categories.

Right(Conservative % Libertarian) % Left(Liberal)
(Science % Mathematics) % Religion

The reader could see that the main ideologies and main sources of knowledge have those same weak spots as the analogy seems to fit. Even the proximity between the reason components, which often occurs, on academy or on ideological views.

1. Narcisism $\sim$ (Emotion $\times$ Reason)
2. Reclusion $\sim$ (Mind $\times$ Reality)
3. Ignorance $\sim$ (Reality % -)
4. Sociopathy $\sim$ (Reason % -)

Narcisism and Sociopathy are considered mental pathologies, and humans affected by those disorders are considered truly evil, one for selfishness and emotional instability, other with absence of empathy. Reclusion and Ignorance, are lesser evils, but they cannot be neglected, as the ignorance and reclusion, both contributes to maintenance of evil in physical world.

There are four, why this text is called trialectical demiurges and not quadialectic demiurges? The sociopathy, or the reason side, they are the union of Intellectual and Will Demiurges. Well I suppose that this is the true meaning of 666, as $2/3 = 0.666\dots$ while the revolt of third part of angels against the lord are the $1/3$ of emotional type spirits. Can't be sure, because there are many interpretations for those biblical enigmas, but these statements fits in our narrative.

The trialectics comes from natural induction of the topological dialectics (External Form, Internal Content). The emotion is close to perception, the Intellect is the inner component and the Will are close to response. From the theory of dialectical projections, one induced assumptions (remember dialectics is a modelling tool, but is not free from implicit induced statements) from trialectics is the trialectical cycle. The trialectical cycle is what keeps the equilibrium between those three directions, in other words, is what keeps the conscience on tridimensional state. But there are possibilities for defective cycles, one of defective cycle possible is the ignorance, when the emotion and will acts for themselves ignoring the intellect. The second cycle is the sociopath or perversion cycle, when the intellect and will ignores the emotion.

The trialectical cycle could be understood from the love between a man and woman, on trialectical cycle we have the spiritual attraction, what could be called love, the seduction, which is the interest and curiosity about their bodies and sex, which is the consumation of love. On an healthy relationship, this cycle repeats itself and keeps the relationship stable. The ignorance cycle occurs when the seduction part are ignored, resulting in lost of interest towards their bodies. The perversion cycle is a cycle without love, when the relationship needs always something new, leading to parafilic behaviours.

The ignorance could easily lead to adultery, as the lack of curiosity will eventually leads to curiosity toward others. The perversion cycle can be inside a relationship, for example, when a man consumes pornography and demands non-meaningful sex for their partner, or by hedonism, when someone pursues the perversion without a stable relationship. The perversion cycle can easily evolve to parafilic behaviour, as their continuity comes from the new experiences, and the old experiences becomes dull and uninteresting. The ignorance cycle through adultery, can display the normal trialectical behaviour, but with the feelings of fear, deception and guilty boosting the cycle.

Unfortunately, those two cycles are stable enough to compete with the trialectical cycle, and then one can understand how those problems are so prevalent. The third cycle, which will be called Fantasy Cycle, is the cycle between Emotion and Intellect, and on the context of love and sexuality, it could be the attachment for fictional love histories or pornography, which are not as bad as the other cycles, but in this text, all those three cycles have a special meaning.

```
Fantasy Cycle ~ (Emotion + Intellect) X Will
... Draw the continuity from new emotions through fictional projections at expense of reality
Perversion Cycle ~ (Intellect + Will) X Emotion
... Draw the continuity from the new experiences denying higher emotional virtues
Ignorance Cycle ~ (Will + Emotion) X Intellect
... Draw the continuity from false positives and development of a bad intuition by denying good intellectual practices to preserve and achieve the truth.

Demiurge of Fantasy ~ (Emotion + Intellect) X Will
Demiurge of Perversion ~ (Intellect + Will) X Emotion
Demiurge of Ignorance ~ (Will + Emotion) X Intellect
God's Archetype ~ (Knowledge % Wisdom) % Intuition
```

These three dialectical formulas describes the nature of the three Trialectical Demiurges, it describes the natural order which keeps those entities strong enough to compete and corrupt the natural order of intellect Reason(Knowledge % Wisdom) % Intuition. But instead of each of the three Demiurges being associated directly with each direction of the trialectics, it stays on middle point of each one and each one displays dual characteristics.

On the trialectical Demiurge thesis, the nature of evil are three and the three are dual $2/3 = 0.666\dots$, in trialetical Demiurge thesis we consider the allegory of the third-part of angels as resulting misinterpretation about the evil from the perspective of one of the Demiurges.

10 Conclusion

Now, back to the reality. All this digression should be treated as an inductive process to reach those three archtype dialectical fórmulas, you should not believe on induction steps, you should not believe on the resulting induced model, it's not important and not the purpose of this text, those fórmulas are the hypothetical model of the ignorance and how could they effectively compete against the three-dimensional conscience God's archetype. Could or not be from spiritual causes, could or not those archtypes being spiritual entities, could or not those entities being actually one, as the aspects of the Devil himself. The main objective of this text is to understand the true challenge which faces humanity, and the true objective of the evil, which is to stop the delopment of conscience.

Demiurge of Fantasy ~ (Emotion + Intellect) X Will
Demiurge of Perversion ~ (Intellect + Will) X Emotion
Demiurge of Ignorance ~ (Will + Emotion) X Intellect
God's Archetype ~ (Knowledge % Wisdom) % Intuition

However, there is not much hope that those affected by the Demiurges to change their minds. Once they become the embodiement of one of the Demiurges, or being affected so deeply that they display pathological behaviours, would be extremely difficult to change theirs minds. The only hope is to pass this knowledge forward, preserving the content and expecting that the next generation be more wise.

Nevertheless, it's not wise to do nothing expecting that those on the side of evil will not try to build an insuperable dystopic system. Once they succeed, all hope are gone until those rulers of the system decides to abdicate from their own will and reform the system.